

Mind Wonderlust

Mind Wanderlust is a bridge between the world around us and our inner world, as they are always connected and intertwined with one another. It's about traveling in one's mind and discovering pristine sides of our identity.

The main character, who has their physical body, is placed into the environment, which is actually their inner world. The landscape is bright and glowy, illuminating the iridescent cloth on the character's head, which symbolizes, how our inner world always affects our appearance in the "real" world.

Surrounded by dreadfully beautiful flowers... with their lovely thorns ready to prick you unforgivingly, slowly twisting around, bringing their radiant petals closer to your head, just so you can smell the alluring fragrance, gradually and unnoticeably suffocating, as you observe the beauty of your infinite internal landscape.

The contrast that happens in our minds as our daily life unfolds.

Social Anxiety

What does it feel like when you want to move freely and express yourself and your thoughts, but something is holding you tightly, nudging you with its cold surface? And while the parts of your face take all the possible uncomfortable shapes, you feel everyone taking notice of it with their piercing stares. Those stares are so perceptible, that they even make noise, which you could hear, unless... you didn't have corks in your ears, which also prevent you from grasping all the info that the outer world is trying to offer to you at the moment. And, after all, you're afraid that even if you garner enough courage to break the chain holding you, the unfelicity of your next movement will cause you to be pricked, which is going to feel even worse.

Protest

The problem of climate change is so inevitable and so important and still not yet brought up enough. Sustainability is rarely the primary aspect of businesses and is seldom a persistent subconscious habit of a human being. While it is still debatable who is to blame for the lack of the feeling of responsibility and awareness within the general public and of course major companies, it is absolutely clear who will borne the consequences. And that "who" is every living creature on Earth.

Doesn't sound optimistic, huh? But just as the main character catches the last beam of sunlight, which managed to break through the dome of pollution, there is a last beam of hope, to which every single one of us can contribute. By sticking to the "green mindset" we are participating in a PROTEST against the system we live in.

The work was inspired by the record of a short performance by @vladimirturner 's "Môj osobný protest" (My personal protest), which was showcased at the Volba2050 exhibition in Kosice, Slovakia.

Intermezzo

This age so persistently tries to persuade us that the feeling of being overwhelmed is absolutely normal. Like we must learn to live with problems that engulf us, with chores that barely let us take a deep breath.

That fleeting moment, that the Impressionists so desperately were trying to portray, gets lost deep down in a pile of waste made up of chores and problems that fill our everyday life. And then.. there is no room neither in our minds, nor in our schedules, to take an Intermezzo... to take a break from our mundane playing-pretend.

And when being deprived of the most important thing in life - ACTUALLY LIVING LIFE - our human nature makes us adapt subconsciously, whether we want it or not.

Sometimes we're just scared to, sometimes we forget, sometimes we don't know how to take a break... to take a break and reload our physical and our spiritual being.

You Need a Little Rain To Grow (Silver Lining)

Rain. Bloom. Grow. After dark goes light.

Just as flowers need some rain to grow, humans need to make mistakes or experience dark rainy environment to spark the light, which reveals earlier undiscovered and hidden parts of our personality. A thunder might flood and destroy the plant, but little rain will help the bloom, after the water is absorbed.

Shiny twisting flowers, representing bright vision, placed in the dark gloomy environment. Flowers set the initial sparkle and will eventually light up everything around them. The crystal near the character symbolizes hope, as one of the most powerful sources of light.